COVER: Plain Pocketbook (Lampsilis cardium, left), Deertoe (Truncilla truncata, upper right), and Threehorn Wartyback (Obliquaria reflexa) were three species, among others, that were historically collected in southern Ontario for the button industry at the onset of the 20th century. While this commercial harvest ended by the mid-1940s, its effects may still be lingering on some of these long-lived animal populations. See the article by Hayes Morris and Morris (pp. 205–216).
